Meeka Brown has been having a tough life.

After a robbery gone wrong took the life of her husband, Meeka was left alone to struggle to raise her son for the last two years on a waitress's salary.

Her job as a waitress is nothing but stress, and she juggles an online degree, while her boss makes her life miserable. It seems like she just can't catch a break. She finds herself driving home from work one night when her car breaks down and she has to walk the rest of the way home.

On her way home, a friendly stranger offers her a ride, but she declines. He persists, and he doesn't seem like the usual creeps that hit on her and her babysitter is on the clock, so she decides to take a ride with him, keeping her pepper spray close by of course.

He turns out to be an absolute gentleman, and a doctor, who just has a totally different attitude towards life. He seems like he comes from a totally different world from her, but she feels a connection. It doesn't hurt that she's been going through a two year dry spell too.

The next morning, she miraculously finds her car all fixed up, with a note from the Doctor asking her out. She thinks nothing of it, and chalks it up to either a rich guy looking to feel good about himself, or someone just trying to get into her pants.

But after finally getting some alone time for herself, and with the helpful encouragement of her mother, she decides to give him a call. And she is so glad she did, because they fall madly in love together. They date for the next few months and become even more infatuated with each other. They become so close that she even finally decides to introduce him to her son. When the doctor meets her son, his face goes pale white, as he discovers a disturbing secret.

Their relationship stays great for the next little while until she gets into a car accident and learns they are connected in a way that she would not have imagined. To top it all off, while she is in the hospital she finds out that she is pregnant.

Will this disturbing secret keep them apart? Or will their love overcome all odds and bring them together again?
