Fred Paulson is suicidal: just after they move into their retirement home in Mendocino, a small art colony on California's isolated North Pacific Coast, his vibrant wife of almost 40 years is killed in a freakish, gruesome, and random accident. Fred is estranged from his two children and unprepared to adjust to his new circumstances. Before it is too late, he must find meaning to his life and make it worth living.

A penniless young artist intrudes into his world and forces him to make a searing reexamination of his life and values. His journey to find significance in a seemingly random universe results in great personal growth that holds promise of a second chance at happiness, but fate is not through with him.

Some strong language and sexual content.
