Excerpt from Philosophical and Political History of the Settlements and Trade of the Europeans in the East and West Indies, Vol. 4: Translated From the French of the Abbé Raynal

The conquest of those immense regions, which are watered by one of the largest and richest rivers of the universe, was resolved upon; and the island of Trinidad, situated at the mouth of the Oronooko, was people, in order to insure and facilitate the execution of so great an enterprise. An island has always the advantage of a continent, when, having but a small extent of country to defend, it has a very large one to attack; as was the case in the present instance.

The river Oronooko, which, as is commonly believed, springs from the Cordeleras, after being increased in a course of five hundred and seventy-five leagues by the influx of a great number of rivers of different magnitude, empties itself into the ocean by more than fifty channels. Its impetuosity is so great, that it stems the most powerful tides, and preserves the freshness of its waters to the distance of twelve leagues from that vast and deep channel within which it was confined. But this rapidity is not always equal, and owes its variations to a circumstance, perhaps, entirely peculiar. The Oronooko, in the month of April, begins to swell, and to continue to rise during five months; the sixth it remains at its greatest height; in October, it begins to subside, and falls gradually till the month of March, during which it continues in a fixed state of its greatest diminution. These alternate changes are regular even to certainty.
