To the outside world Beth Burrows has mended her mangled heart – only she knows she will never get over John Callan but she's finally moved on. She can't explain it to people but it was no ordinary romance. It was a visceral chemistry of mind and heart that she knows only too well possibly only happens once in a lifetime.

Work has been her saviour and she is carving out a career for herself as a pretty good Jewellery designer. Her creations are very much a part of her. Her designs are all an expression of her personality. In a weird way she has John to thank for this business. He created this artist within her.

But... it's almost three years on and Beth's contented in a relationship with safe and reliable Rory. That is until her best friend and John's sister, Alice, announces that she and Dan are getting married. Beth's life is turned upside down again when John is asked to be the best man to her chief Bridesmaid.

In the middle of all this Beth's parents are moving to Nerja in Spain and out of the blue offer Beth and Rory to move into their home. Rent free. What excuse could she possibly have not to move in with Rory? None, until she finds him one night in an unthinkable situation.

When she comes face to face with John after three years she makes some truly awful life decisions. It's time to face what's really in her heart. What she always knew.
