Three Days in Avalon

Three Days in Avalon E. S. Wells

I started out as their guide, just a guy showing them around an old castle site. I ended up being the one that led them to slaughter. I led them through an ancient cave, ignoring my gut, ignoring the old man who warned us to stay on the path. I led them into the tunnel...into a world that never should have existed. Fifteen hundred years into the past we stepped, fear gripped my very soul as we exited the cave. I led these two women to a place that gave false peace, for what truly awaited them was the promise of death. Swords can slice through a woman just as quickly as a man, we found this out the hard way. Elaine was a reincarnated soul, a soul that the Knights wanted...needed. Joan was Elaine's best friend and kept her balanced...until the end. The tale you are about to read is true, however unbelievable it may be. The love that was found in that far away land, is one that lasted throughout time, ours and theirs. But so did the pain as well. We were given three days to save something that we could not comprehend. Elaine was the one the Knights needed, the one who could save them all...and us as well. She struggled with who she really was and all we could do is watch as her life hung in the balance. As the Knights struggled with the thought of their own demise, a death without peace should Elaine fail to save them all. I was just a guide on that fateful morning. I am Mark...the man that led them to Avalon.
