Tammy's Blues: Letters From a Mother to a Daughter Brandy C. Williams

Tammy's Blues: Letters from a Mother to a Daughter contains a collection of letters written by Tammy to her daughter Brandy while they were separated due to Tammy's drug addiction, mental illness, and incarceration. The letters are accompanied by short essays written by Brandy.

As a teen single-parent, Tammy struggled to provide Brandy with a healthy and safe environment. She was determined to educate Brandy by any means necessary. One of her favorite phrases, "do as I say, not as I do," guided her as she tried to provide Brandy with a Biblical education while struggling to uphold the very values that she espoused.

The letters detail everyday parenting advice from personal hygiene to self-sufficiency, from prom night to college preparation. The discussion of drug abuse, prison commissary, abandonment, and redemption pushes the correspondence beyond a typical parent/child relationship.
