Take a middle-aged white man and send him on holiday to the Philippines with some friends and then be prepared for some surprises, but not the ones you might expect....

Okay, he is no saint, but nor is he a sinner – he’s just someone whose values lie somewhere between the two. However he is genuine, honest and real, to the point where even he will admit he is not the most PC person around. Nor has he an iron will which can overcome all carnal desires, so please don’t expect to read all about the next Mother Theresa.

What you will enjoy about this book is how you can have more fun than you imagined, but in a rewarding and humbling way, by just being a half-decent person. There is no reason why you can’t experience a little of what you fancy, but does it need to be impersonal and dispassionate? Surely memories of someone you took the time to get to know will last longer and be sweeter than those of half an hour spent with a complete stranger.

Read about the semi-single mum, the lady boy the author ran from, straight in to oncoming traffic, his heart racing and head full of mixed emotions. A lady boy he now calls a great friend. Then there is the sweet and outrageously cute virgin shop assistant wanting marriage and who dropped him off at a girly bar with instructions, knowing that all men need company after their first romantic date. Finally throw in some no-nonsense tips for when you come to the beautiful Philippines for your first visit. Yes, it’s okay to be a little horny at times, and for the price of a coffee, this easy-to-read eye-opening eBook will make you laugh and probably think about that dream trip differently.
